Will the US midterm election results change America's investment outlook towards India? In this special conversation on Business Today, Siddharth Zarabi, Group Editor, Business Today, speaks with Vinay V. Singh, Managing Director, Primus Partners USA, about the implications of the electoral verdict for India-US business and diplomatic ties. Singh discusses why Indian companies should strengthen their engagement with US state administrations, the potential for greater state-to-state investment and trade partnerships, and whether American companies could see fresh opportunities in India. The conversation also examines the future of US tariffs, Russian oil sanctions, the Democrats' approach towards India, and the possibility of a shift in Washington's policy stance. With broader policy changes potentially taking time until 2028, where should Indian businesses focus their efforts now? Watch the full conversation for insights into what the US midterm verdict could mean for India's investment and trade prospects.
